you are daunted by this task, but you must go. the training your parents paid for was costly, and you can't waste their hard-earned money like that. you begin to prepare.

your parents almost cry when you tell them of your quest. the cave of darkness is the most dangerous dungeon in the area. there are other dungeons, of course, but you're going nowhere with your rusty iron sword.

it would be possible, you suppose, if you knew magic or martial arts, and you muse over your career choice as you pay for fresh bread to bring with you on your journey.

the elder approximates that it will take about a month to arrive at the cave and complete your task, and then a couple days to trek back, if you're fast and competent. luckily, you are fast, but whether you are competent or not is still to be decided.

as you prepare to leave your home, a two pairs of twins are born. you file this information in your head for later, so that when you come home you aren't that surprised that your sister

You peak through the door one last time then close it. You sit on the floor contemplating whether you should or even could complete the task given to you. A lot can happen in in a few months, you think. maybe ill die. Maybe ill never see my family again. Then, you think of what else could happen. If i succeed, then id have spent my parents' money wisely, AND I'LL BECOME A WARRIOR!

You walk out of your room with new found confidence. You strut over to your parents who are staring at you with dumbfounded looks. "Thanks," you say "but i need to go, no, I HAVE to go! You have done so much for me, and now its time i return the favor. I know you're worried about me, but i can do it. I promise."

Your parents are still staring at you, but now with admiration. You can tell that like you, they've made up their minds. They believe in you, but not as much as you believe in your self. You walk out saying," i'm going to start practicing."
